New high-tech ad agency blows

STORMY START FOR LASER

By RAN ANGSTROM

ORLANDO, Fla. — Entrepreneur Kit Banks is determined to give advertisers a powerful new voice. He has found a way to blaze their slogans across the sky in mile-wide letters.

"This is skywriting for the 21st century," Banks told Weekly World News. "Advertisers are fed up with traditional skywriting, rendered in plumes of white smoke, because the messages drift away before they're even completed. Our new system makes use of a laser projector — like the ones you might have seen in planetarium shows — mounted on a modified long-range jet.

"It's the world's only real Laser Jet Printer," he added.

According to technical reports issued by Banks' SkyScribe Corporation, most laser beams can be seen only when they pass through dust, smoke or fog. But he has developed one powerful enough to be seen in thin air day or night, under any weather conditions.

Unfortunately, a series of accidents has threatened SkyScribe's much-hallyhooed launch. During the maiden voyage of the Laser Jet, an ad for a satellite television service actually destroyed the satellite being advertised, which orbited – unluckily — a few hundred miles above the jet's ultrapowerful beam.

In its second failed effort, a laser-beamed ad for a major airline temporarily blinded six of the airline's own pilots, who were flying in nearby air-traffic corridors. All six flights narrowly avoided mid-air collisions.

Critics have come out of the woodwork to rail against the Laser Jet. Brenda Drub of the Chicago 'Your Spots' organization said: "We've spent our careers combating ads that promote sexism, ads that damage self-esteem, and ads that make people hate their bodies. Now we have to take a stand against ads that can actually kill people. It's insane!"

Banks is unfazed by the setbacks and challenges.

"Maybe planes should stop towing banners across beaches because those aircraft could crash," he huffed. "Or maybe we should abandon magazine ads because they cause paper cuts, or get rid of TV commercials because they contribute to eyestrain. Any start-up system is bound to has died as a result of a Laser Jet campaign. Once we get the kinks out, they'll be as safe as rainbows." He grinned. "One with a pot of gold at the end worth hundreds of millions of dollars."

DUE to a typographical error, the word "prostatism" appeared as "prostitism" in the third column of our story "Saber Twins Take a New Bite Out of Crime" (July 18, 2005).

In the same issue, in the story headlined "Moon Doomed!," Weekly World News quoted NASA physicist Dr. Tark Stevis describing the discovery of a deposit on the moon containing "... a deadly amalgam of U-235, plutonium and a super-heavy new element we've called black monolithium." But we neglected to include the word "weak" when describing the

ON JULY 1, 2005, the paper of record ran an editorial by the distinguished Thomas L. Friedman. The headline was "Follow the Leapin' Leprechaun."

The article itself – about European economic models – contains references to the future (the year 2010 is mentioned) and predicts what will happen between now and then.

The details are not important. What matters is that The New York Times has discovered what this newspaper has always known: That the world is run by strange forces and even stranger beings. On April 25, we were already telling our readers how the world economy was being impacted by leprechauns.

Newspapers and newsweeklies are great if you want sanitized, advertiser-controlled versions of events that have already happened. For an independent voice and a look at what will occur – in the future and out among the galaxies – there is only one newspaper of choice.

Renowned paleontologist confirms . . .

Payiliasaurus lived during the 'JEWRASSIC PERIOD'

By TERRANCE GREARCK

WHITE TAIL, Alberta — After years of digging in the dusty badlands of Alberta, Canada, a New Jersey paleontologist, Dr. Jeremy Hornschreiber, has just announced one of the most astonishing dinosaur finds of the century — a well-preserved trachodon skull wearing a skullcap with distinct forelocks next to what would have been its ears.

"This is the proof I've been searching for all my life," the 79-year-old Dr. Hornschreiber enthused. "These duck-billed dinosaurs, subgenus Orthodontia, a.k.a. Payiliasaurus, clearly practiced an early form of Judaism. They lived around 75 million years ago during what I have tentatively called the Jewrassic Period."

Dr. Hornschreiber said there were several reasons for his long-held hypothesis that trachodons were Jewish.

"We have known for decades that they whistled through their nostrils in shofar-like blasts — t-t-t-t-tttttt," he demonstrated, alluding to the ram's horn blown during religious ceremonies.

"The dinosaurs had hollow,

DEAR EDITOR, I really wish Noah's second ark had survived (July 11, 2005). Ever since I was a young girl, I've always wanted a unicorn for a pet, and until now I never understood why my mother wouldn't get me one – there aren't any left. Noah's son killed them all.

I guess he didn't technically kill them, but close enough. It was his idea to keep all those beautiful creatures confined and caged up. No wonder they got mad and ravaged the ark. I would have too.

And it's not like he could stop them once they were all – no one would be dumb enough to get in the ark full of wonders sink into the ocean.

Dear Editor, Looks like the whole runaway bride thing happens in Bigfoot land too, huh? I can't believe Bigfoot's bride took off (July 4, 2005)! Poor thing.

bony crests on their heads that served as amplifying chambers for the tra-claodon's resonant voice. The crests served another purpose: They held the skullcap in place since bobby pins had not yet been invented."

The scientist added that final proof came from analyses of the cellular structure of their bones, which makes it clear they never mixed milk and meat.

"Hornschreiber is a complete toad," said Dr. Paul Doherty, a paleontologist on the faculty of St. Aloysius University in Nevada.

"What he thinks is a skullcap is discoloration from centuries of water seepage and the dinosaurs are just moss. Besides, I happen to know that trachodons were probably Catholics. They mated for life, laid a bountiful supply of eggs every year, and their fossilized marrow shows they never ate fish on Fridays."

"Actually, both men are daft," said Dr. Charles R. Day of the New York Museum of Pre-History.

"Trachodons didn't eat meat or fish. They were strict vegetarians. These are, without a doubt, two of the most idiotic theories I've ever heard."

NIGHT WATCHMAN SUES OVER WORKING NIGHTS!

By SCOTT STEVENS

BEDFORD, Mass. – Bernard Kipley was hired to be a night watchman for the Sandover Construction Company – until the company told him that he'd have to work nights. When he refused, he was fired. Kipley sued the company – and amazingly, he won!

Five minutes after he had been hired, Kipley was informed that he would be working from midnight to eight a.m.

"I said, 'You're kidding me, right? I can't work nights. That's when all my favorite TV infomercials are on,'" Kipley said.

When Kipley refused the hours, the company immediately terminated him. Kipley then sued Sandover on the grounds that it discriminated against people who don't like working nights.

Surprisingly, Judge Judy Bench agreed with Kipley.

"Just as there's nothing that says a 'night watchman' has to be a 'man,' there's no reason a night watchman can't work during the day," the judge ruled.

Kipley's lawyer said, "Now I'm working on my next case, representing a private day

ANGEL BABY!

By JOHN E. THERAL

FRANKFORT, Ky. — Dr. Haagwash was bringing a new life into the world at the Frankfurt Medical Center when he saw an astounding sight.

"As the mother pushed, a light began to emanate from the womb," said Dr. Haagwash. "When the baby emerged he was crowned with a halo!"

As stunned doctors stood by, Marie Joseph took her son in her arms and basked in the golden glow.

"I've been blessed with an angel," she said tearfully.

Dr. Haagwash had never seen anything like it. "Was that really a halo on Paul's head?" he wondered. "And whatever its nature, was the glow benign?"

At first Marie was reluctant to have her son studied like a lab animal. She was content to accept the halo for what it was.

But Dr. Haagwash's concerns prevailed and Paul was sent to the Frankfurt Institute for Intriguing Phenomena.

"We knew it wasn't radioactive," said Dr. Allan Hasium, head research scientist at FIIP. "If it were, the radiation would have affected our equipment.

Dr. Hasium initially theorized that the halo was caused by friction.

"The baby was born with a full head of hair," he said. "Perhaps the friction caused by his passage through the birth canal created a

"Either that, or it was a real halo," Dr. Hasium joked.

He told Marie to contact him if the boy exhibited any strange side effects.

INTREPID WWN TRAVELER

Does ordinary travel make you yawn? Been there, done that? Well, there are a few places you probably haven't visited. That's because they are the most difficult-to-reach places on earth.

By TERRANCE OBRANCE

ENTERPRISING Inuit in Canada's newest territory, Nunavut, have opened one of the world's most unusual restaurants.

A whale beached in Grise Fiord, Canada's northernmost community, died last year and was too big to haul back out to sea. Natives turned its head into a restaurant where they serve such local specialties as caribou, seal meat and musk ox.

Since this is the only restaurant in Grise Fiord (population 130), the restaurant has become a community gathering place with a dart board, a pool table and other diversions. Hunters and fishermen stop in, tying their dogs outside. Pipe-smoking (which hides the smell of the rotting whale), beer drinking and conversation go on day and night.

You will witness the small children playing games such as 'mauth' (put your arm around the other's shoulder and one finger in the other's mouth and pull) and knuckletop (pretty much what it sounds like) while their elders wager on the outcome.

If you make it up to Grise Fiord, it would be useful to know a few phrases in Inuktitut, the local language. Nasitunga (pronounced Nah-toon-ga) means "I am hungry." Qimuksikkuurumavunga (pronounced Kim-mook-sick-koor-roo-muh-voon-ga) means "I want to go by dog team." Kuvianak inovia (pronounced Koo-vi-a-nak-in-o-vi-a) means "Merry Christmas."

Because surrounding seas are frozen 10 months out of the year, the restaurant is only open in June and July – but with 24 hours of daylight, you can drop in

Behind the scenes with America's 'headless shrink'

By [redacted] JEFFRIES

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — Dr. Suzanne Blankenship is a psychologist who specializes in treating patients with strikingly bizarre or unusual physical abnormalities.

"I am in a unique position to give my patients compassion, help, advice and encouragement because I, too, suffer from a rare physiological deviation. My condition is called [redacted] — an electromagnetic — optical illusion that [redacted] light and makes my head invisible to the naked eye.

"But I can assure you my head is actually there. I counsel others like myself because I understand on the most visceral level my patients' pain and problems coping in a cold, often cruel, world."

With permission of her patient, the unique psychologist shared with Weekly World News notes from her Professional Journal, which her assistant transcribed from a recent taped session with 25-year-old LR*, a man who was born with 10 ears, grown in random spots on his arms, legs, torso and feet.

From the Professional Journal of Dr. Suzanne Blankenship.

Transcription No. [redacted]
Patient: LR Tuesday July 5.
Problem: Came because feeling freakish and isolated.

DOC: How have you been since our last session?

LR: A little better, I guess. I took your advice and made a list of all the pros of being born with aural X — 10 ears.

DOC: What was at the top of [redacted] up subtle rhythm variations, [redacted] mood and shades that [redacted] musicians can't possibly begin to imagine.

DOC: So this helps you feel good about yourself?

LR: Yes, I think it does.

DOC: How are you coping with the staring?

LR: Better. I suppose you've had to deal with that yourself since it looks like you're headless.

DOC: Yes.

LR: I used to wear long pants and shirts and hats to cover up the ears on my arms, legs and forehead, but now I have the confidence to let the world see me as I really am. It's still a problem when little children point and scream . . .

DOC: But it's their problem. You have to remember they're kids. They do the same thing to someone who's missing a leg or arm or any more common abnormality.

LR: I know.

Doc: How about the dating problem we addressed last week?

LR: I don't know. I still can't believe anyone would want to date a guy with ears on his palms, elbows and ankles.

DOC: We discussed that. Beautiful is on the inside. And you're a beautiful person.

LP: I can hear a person's heartbeat. I know when they're lying to me — I know when they're scared. It makes me self-conscious.

DOC: You have to get past that by putting them at ease. As soon as you play your violin for a woman she'll fall madly in love with you.

LR: I played it for you.

DOC: That's right. It was [redacted] The one I favored, the D.P. — Different Physically?

LR: Yes. And there was this young woman there . . .

DOC: Tell me about her.

LR: Her name is Robin. She's an astronomer. She's short because she has no torso. Her neck is on top of her hips. She asked me to come to her observatory because my excellent hearing could help her pick up signals from space. She says there are all kinds of strange sounds but no one knows what they are.

DOC: Then go.

LR: You think I should?

DOC: Absolutely.

Session ended with patient feeling better about himself and eager to get on with his life. It took 10 months of repeating my message, but the man with 10 ears finally seems to have "heard" me.

RIVAL EXERCISE GROUPS IN STREET BRAWL

Pilates vs Tai Chi!

By KIP LEWIS

CHICAGO, Ill. – A gang-related street brawl erupted in the heart of the business district last week. But it was not conventional gangs. Rival exercise groups clashed in Daly Plaza during their lunch breaks.

"They've been cutting through our territory on the way to their lame pilates, disrespecting our Tai Chi class," office worker Vanessa Paige told Weekly World News. "We like the open space in the plaza to do our movements."

Pilates spokeswoman Gloria Fryer said, "How much room does someone really need to wave their arms around? Tai Chi isn't even real exercise. It's like really slow charades. 'This is a bird.' 'This is a grasshopper.' Pilates rocks. Feel my abs."

Ed Hudson, who works for the Plaza Beautification Service, described the scene. "It was like a gang fight out of West Side Story, without the music and singing. A bunch of slap fighting ladies and older folks. All in great shape though."

Panicked lunchtime plaza patrons dove for cover as the air filled with flying exercise balls. Hudson said, "The pilates gals formed a line like the archers at Agincourt and sent a fusillade against the Tai Chi line. They used their resistance belts like sling-shots. It was beautiful, yet deadly."

The precise and fluid Tai Chi body movements were useless against the onslaught. The Tai Chi gang was last seen pirouetting and horse-stancing their way up Michigan Avenue, leaving the pilates in command of the field.

"Just wait till next week, when the high-impact exhibition cheerleaders start training for the fall," Hudson said.

DOZENS INJURED AT SEED-SPITTING CONTEST

By NIGEL FLEMING

PROVIDENCE, R.I. – In what can only be described as an event of sheer horror, dozens of people were injured at the annual Friendship Park watermelon seed-spitting contest.

Twelve of the wounded were rushed to Gretch Memorial Hospital with eye, nose and groin injuries sustained from speeding seeds. Many others were treated at the scene, where grief counselors were brought in to console the victims and their families.

Shocked contestants stood with rinds in their hands and juice dribbling down their chins. Curtis Winfield, 23, told us what happened.

"We were trying to break Harley Wilson's old distance record of 86 feet, 11 inches as we approached the line. Seven of us bit into our melons and got a mouthful of seeds. Then we all fired at once and this humongous gust of wind came from behind and sent our seeds flying like bullets."

Fifty-five-year-old Ernest Dickens relived the horror. "I was standing on the sidelines," he groaned. "Suddenly, this barrel-chested kid spewed dozens of seeds machine-gun style, hitting me in the face, neck and torso. I was knocked to the ground and covered in blood-red watermelon juice. Three tours of duty in Nam didn't prepare me for this."

Mary Hackenwiffle, a spokesperson for Friendship Park, said, "Until we complete a thorough investigation, there will be absolutely no spitting allowed on the grounds."

Outraged officials in Rhode Island are proposing a bill to ban watermelon-seed spitting. Whatever the outcome, spitters are

DEATH'S DOOR

Babe in business suit blocks hellmouth

By ALI GHERI

CORDILLA, Ga. — Five miles outside this tiny rustic town is a small forest with a large cave and a massive iron gate.

"It's not a place you want to visit," theologian and paranormal researcher Danton Fernoe told us after returning to town. "Make sure your readers understand that.

"When I read that Satan visited this cave after tangling with Bigfoot (Weekly World News, July 25, 2005) I decided to check it out," said Fernoe. "I arrived and saw a woman sitting at a small table behind the gate. She was dressed in a business suit with a short skirt. There was a gold key and a laptop on the table, nothing more. She stopped playing computer Solitaire as soon as she saw us."

"Where's your escort?" the woman asked suspiciously.

Prof. Fernoe told her he didn't understand.

"Oh," the woman said. "You're not dead." She resumed her game of Solitaire. "Go away."

"Why?" he asked.

"Because this is Death's Door and I'm Petra," she told him.

Fernoe felt a chill. "Are you the guardian?"

"The one and only. I'm like St. Peter but without the Pearly Gates. Just these," she said, fingering a pearl necklace. "A gift from Satan for 2,000 years of devoted service. Now I suggest you move along."

"Why?" Fernoe asked. "If I'm not dead, how am I at risk?"

"I sit here 24/7 and, as you can see, there's not a lot to do," she said. "Sometimes, when I'm bored, I cause things to 'happen' just so I'll have a soul to process." She pointed to a boulder teetering on the ledge over the cave directly above Fernoe's head. "Get my meaning?"

"I do," Fernoe said, backing away. "A sure-

UNFAIR TO LEMONS!

Growers demand respect for fruit

By MARK WELLER

PORT ST. LUCIE, Fla. – The days of referring to a bad car as a lemon may be coming to an end. The United Citrus Growers of America (UCGA) is lobbying Congress to pass legislation forbidding the use of the word to refer to cars with substantial defects. UCGA president Edward Newell explained why.

"Lemons have a sour taste, and having a defective car or product is a souring experience and that's how the term came about," he said at a press conference. "But lemons are also prized for their sour taste. So their sourness is a positive thing. And yet every time someone applies the term to a faulty product, it casts negative aspersions on this magnificent fruit."

After extensive research, the UCGA has selected sponge as the ideal word to describe a bad car.

"A sponge soaks up liquid just as a bad car soaks up your money," stated Newell. "Plus, it's always leaking liquid, just like a bad car leaks fluids. And sponges grow underwater, which is where most of these terrible cars belong."

A major publicity campaign is about to get underway to upgrade the public perception of lemons, revealed Newell.

"We have offers out to Angelina Jolie, Halle Berry and Pam Anderson to become Miss Lemon 2006," he said. "She will travel across the country as UCGA's goodwill ambassador, encouraging Americans to 'Put a Little Zing in Your Life.' "

So far, there has been no reaction from the North American Sponge Council.

In a related story, the U.S. Park Council has introduced legislation to forbid law enforcement officers being referred to as "pigs" –

MY HUSBAND SAYS I DRESS LIKE A SLUT!

Hi, Dolly!

THE COUNTRY'S BOLDEST ADVICE COLUMNIST ANSWERS YOUR QUESTIONS – BUT YOU ASKED FOR IT!

HI, DOLLY: I like to dress in sexy clothes but my husband says I look like a slut. — Angel in L.A.

Dear Angel: Sounds like your husband has a brain the size of a peach pit — and just as dense. Rip some pages from fashion magazines and hang them on the refrigerator where he'll see them. Everyone [illegible] Queen of England to[illegible] like a slut these days.

It sounds to me like your husband is afraid you'll be too attractive to other men.

If he's insecure about his [illegible] sex appeal, tell him to hit the gym. Don't change your wardrobe unless you want to. If he keeps on criticizing you, think about changing husbands.

[illegible] tongue-tied

Hi, Dolly: My daughter wants to get her tongue pierced. What do I do? — Marge in Detroit

Dear Marge: Blink your initial reaction to scream and cut your hair down to a fuzzy nub. Say, "That's nice, honey. Maybe we can go and do that together!" Having her mom want it will be so uncool she'll probably go to a movie instead.

I can't get my wife away from [illegible] book [illegible]

Hi, [illegible]: My wife watches TV day and night. She should pay more attention to me. — Barry in Phoenix

Dear Clueless Barry: How she spends her time when you're away is her own private business. If she's watching Desperate Housewives at night, that should be a hint that you haven't exactly been entertaining her the way she likes, needs or deserves. Get on the ball before you become like that other TV show. — Lost.

All this rap music is making me crazy!

[illegible]: [illegible] listen to rap all day and it makes me crazy. They play it so loud I can even hear it through their earphones! Help! — Lani in Omaha, Neb.

Dear Lani: Honey, you need to drown that noise out. Know whatcha do? Buy some opry — [illegible] not the good [illegible] and Billy is real loud. That might not change your kids' taste in "music" but they'll probably leave the house so you can [illegible] some peace and quiet.

Help! I'm trapped in the Web!

Hi, Dolly: I'm [illegible] to the Internet while my husband is at work. When he comes home, I miss my chat room friends. — Bobbie in Dallas

Dear Bobbie: Addictions are tough to break because there's usually a good reason why we have 'em. Reconnect with [illegible] hubby [illegible] him to join you in the chat room or start one with him.

You've got to get yourself back into the real world with real people, girl.

Should I go with Dick or Sam?

Hi, Dolly: I'm engaged to Dick and [illegible] supposed to get married. But recently I met a guy named Sam and I can't stop thinking about him. What should I do? — Lisa in Peoria, Ill.

Dear Lisa: Call off the nuptials. Sam may not be the one, but Dick sure ain't it. When I met my first husband there was [illegible] sensation. He hung the moon for me. Too bad he had a roving eye and hands to match. Now he's on the run from me and a posse of pun-tobin' husbands!

SURVEY LISTS AMERICA'S LEAST FAVORITE ICE-CREAM FLAVORS

By MARK MILLER

SAN FRANCISCO – According to the International Ice Cream Association, the following are, in order of preference, the 10 most popular ice-cream flavors in America:

- Vanilla
- Chocolate
- Butter pecan
- Strawberry
- Cookies and cream
- Vanilla fudge ripple
- Praline pecan

That's the top of the ice-cream heap. Then there is the bottom of the ice-cream heap. Ice-cream industry expert Christine Sato was asked to determine the nation's least popular ice-cream flavors.

"I surveyed over 5,000 ice-cream parlor patrons," [illegible] popular ice-cream flavors to the country, but in the interest of science I tasted them all."

The 10 least popular ice-cream flavors in America are:

- Liver colada
- Garlic praline
- Spinach 'n' sprouts sorbet

Sato remains amazed by these and some of the other flavors she encountered.

"The bizarre thing to me is that someone not only thought that a flavor like ham fruit could be a big-seller in Tennessee, but also managed to convince others that this was a good idea," Sato stated. "Many customers praised an outright [illegible]

THE LEGEND OF BRIGADOOM

By [redacted] DANNETT

MOOREHEAD, Mass. — As I made my way through the low lying fog, I thought back to the fateful day when I first discovered the Legend of Brigadoom.

I was working the day shift in the Weekly World News morgue — that's library to newspaper talk — when I came across a 90-year-old copy of the original Weekly World News.

That was back when it was Ye Olde Weekly Colonial News, founded three years before by Benjamin Franklin's uncle Stewie.

In the fragile, yellowed pages was a story so gripping, so strange that it bore further investigation. According to the article, witch trials had been held in the Puritan hamlet of Moorehead. A young milk maid, Gwendolyn Simone, had been accused of [illegible] from [illegible] revealed that Simone — described by witnesses as "a rather contrary quarrelsome wolf" — had been seen communing with swine and cavorting with a mysterious fellow named "Mr. Scratch."

The town warned her that it was unseemly for a single lass of 18 years to be out at night with a straight man. She ignored their warnings and on the eve of the summer solstice as that year all the mile in Purity County emptied at the stake for being a witch most malefactent.

As it turned out, the villagers were correct about her. As the flames consumed Simone, she cast a final curse. That the village disappear into the sands of purgatory only to reappear once every hundred years so the world could behold the inner and outer ugliness of the inhabitants.

A quick check of the morgue's files for The New American Weekly News in 1805 and The New Century Weekly World News of 1905 revealed that the cursed villagers of Moorehead did indeed return each century, appearing in paper. The ghostly villagers wreaked terrible revenge on any living being who crossed their path.

With the solstice fast approaching I realized that a photograph of the town would be my ticket out of the Weekly World News morgue straight to the news desk.

So there I was, creeping through the mists and moving closer to what I hoped to find. Moorehead, a town that wasn't on any map. A town that vanished three centuries before.

As I scrambled, torches suddenly appeared on the horizon. I crawled closer. The fires illuminated a stake where a witch was scheduled to die. In the background was the wavering, fog-enshrouded town from another time . . . though not from another place.

Were the legends true? The proof would be in the photo-who materialised behind me in the pale moonlight.

As I struggled with these examples of what The New Century Weekly World News of 1905 had called Puritans Restructus, I got a good look at them. They had grotesque, monstrous faces of indescribable hatred [illegible] unblinking eyes dripped blood and their bodies — the parts not draped in rotting garments — were covered with festering boils.

"Consign this hell spawn in devil's garb to the flames!" an unearthly voice wailed in my ear.

Either I had found Moorehead, or else I'd stumbled on a Marilyn Manson family reunion.

Quickly they trussed me up and set me on the stake. I found myself back-to-back with their first victim, the 318-year-old witch Gwendolyn Simone! As my eyes met hers I was overcome by her sheer, ageless beauty.

If only we had met in another time, another place, where we were die at my feet and almost at once my Nikes began to sizzle and melt. Simone's eyes looked longingly at me, streaming tears as the first rosy hues of dawn broke through the barren pines. Suddenly possessed with fury and a clear desire to save me, she repeated the curse she had uttered [illegible] many centuries ago — "Let the town beyone till a century may dawn!"

And suddenly I was no longer trussed, no longer aflame. I was alone in the morning woods as if it had all been a dream.

I had my story for Weekly World News, though I don't think I'll be leaving the morgue. Maybe it was the fire driving me a little mad, but in those few moments we shared, I fell in love with the long-dead witch.

All I have of her now is a woodcut from Ye Olde Weekly Colonial News. But I also have two goals. First, to stay here with the woodcut as long as I can. Second, to watch what I eat, jog every day and stay out of trou-

BY ED ANGER

SO THEY WANT TO BE MARTYRS?

I'M MADDER than a camel dealer with sand fleas in his shorts over the continued insurgency in Iraq and the threat of terrorism in general.

Folks, just like every other red-blooded American, the war on terror and how it [redacted] our [redacted], our servicemen and our future has been weighing heavily on my mind. I think I have an answer — maybe the answer — to putting the enemy out of business for keeps.

Vice President Dick Cheney [redacted] us that the bad guys are champing at the bit to attack our blessed land with weapons of mass destruction. Now you'll hear some liberals whine about that, saying we shouldn't take it as a foregone conclusion, but hell, the way I see it, the VP's just being realistic. If a fox is determined to get into the henhouse, then he'll eventually find a way to do it, as my grandpappy used to say. These SOBs have attacked us before. Life — even their own — isn't worth spit to them. And that got me to thinking. Maybe we need to stop caring too. Maybe we need to give them a taste of their own mass-murdering medicine.

So why not start by pepper-ing the mountains between Afghanistan and Pakistan with nuclear bombs? No warning; just let 'em fly. By the way, they're hiding out there, [redacted] the initial blast then in the fallout that follows.

Yep, it's an extreme solution — extremely effective, that is. Take a gander at WW2 — just two nukes stamped 'paid' on the Japanese war machine, by crucky.

After that, we go chase down the rest of the bastards. How?

Somebody knows where they are, whether it's in Syria, Indonesia or some other country. All we need to do is "persuade" them to tell us.

We've tried being generous — Dubya has already liberated two nations from tyranny, for the love of Pete, with Iran waiting in the wings. We've provided economic support and disaster relief to a boat-load of [redacted] rewards. But, like your typical freeloading, skateboarding, iPod-listening teenager, it just isn't working.

Folks, it's time to deliver an ultimatum.

The leaders of terrorist states know where the bad guys are hiding. Hell, they're probably paying the rent. Let's tell these jerks they've got 23 hours and 59 minutes to talk, then get the hell out of Dodge while we take them out. If the leaders refuse, they can use their last minute on Earth to pray before we blow them to the kingdom come they say they crave. Then we move to the next city. And the next. Until there are no [redacted] terrorists.

Harsh? Yeah. Effective? [redacted]

Now old Ed's not totally heartless. I feel bad for the innocents who may die, but if we choose our targets carefully we should be able to keep the loss of civilian life down to a bare [redacted] — say a few hundred thousand or so.

The thing is friends, just like in World War II, we didn't ask for this fight. We were sneak-attacked. The enemy will do it again if we don't stop them.

I just told you how. Hell, at least we're giving other [redacted]ol.

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. – New safety and other regulations have made it increasingly difficult for some people to board an airplane. Now a new airline is catering exclusively to these fliers.

The new airline, Pariah Air, announced, "We're the airline for the unwanted. If everyone else wants to 'ground' you, come fly with us."

Pariah president Robert Greenman said, "Other airlines recently banned people with body odor. Other airlines charge you for two seats if you're obese. You can be a thousand pounds, and on Pariah, you'll only pay for one ticket. If you're a chain smoker, you can puff away on our planes.

"There are passengers whose names show up on the 'no-fly' list because they're considered a security risk. We'll take that risk. Ninety-nine percent of the time, it's a mistake, anyway."

Greenman continued, "The fastest growing segment of the population is undesirables – people the other airlines simply

THE FURTHER EXPLOITS OF AMERICA'S GAY HERO

BLOWIN' IN THE WIND WITH MISS ADVENTURE

By DREW SULLIVAN

'I need a breeze – and it better be a stiff one!'

TEANECK, N.J. — It isn't always lucrative being an adventurer who often dresses as an adventuress — even when you're Miss Adventure, the Gayest American Hero.

For every moneymaking enterprise Kevin Andrews has undertaken, there have been exploits that haven't put a penny in his coffers.

Thus, when Andrews and his friend and mentor Danny "Dee Dee" Romano decided to pull up stakes, buy a mobile home, and hit the high road to danger, they found themselves without the wherewithal to accomplish their goal.

The solution? Another race — this time in a balloon!

"One thing you can say about Dee Dee," Andrews told us, "is that he's extremely friendly. Whenever he's missing for a few hours I only have to look under the nearest neighbor to find him.

"He knows men in all walks of life, walking all sorts of streets. So it didn't surprise me when he suggested we enter a coast-to-coast balloon race and added that he'd already found us a sponsor."

Romano had known Fred Nichles, president of Nichles' Notions and Novelties, purveyor of such items as X-ray specs, black gum, itching powder and trick handcuffs. In fact, Dee Dee had been the first trick on whom Nichles had tried the cuffs. The company's most popular offering was without doubt the world's loudest and rudest whoopie cushion, known to aficionados of practical jokes as Frootie's Tootie.

In recent years, thanks to kids who are more preoccupied with creating computer viruses and on-line flame wars instead of slipping whoopie cushions under peoples' seats, Nichles' Notions and Novelties had fallen on hard times.

The company needed to promote itself back into the big time, and Frootie was fired by Dee Dee's idea to finance a gigantic hot air balloon based on the scientific principles inherent in Frootie's Tootie — and to hire Miss Adventure to pilot it from New Jersey to the prissiest spot in San Francisco.

Andrews was given an appropriate wardrobe ("I went with the classic aviatrix look of Amelia Earhart, rendered in black leather and silver lame.") and bought some Dramamine.

Onboard, on the day of the race, the morning mail brought an ill wind in the form of a poorly scribbled note from the dastardly fiend who'd tried to kill Andrews on two previous occasions — the Masked Marble! As always, the villain's atrocious script was almost indecipherable, but Andrews got the gist of it.

"The note read, 'What goes up must come down,'" Andrews recalled, "which proved conclusively that the Masked Marble wasn't anyone I'd ever dated. After reading the note Dee Dee was for calling it quits, but I refused to let the mean old baddie bust my balloon. He was just a loser blowhard. I, on the other hand, had been successfully blowing hard for most of my adult life.

"What's more, at the fair

Tootie. The crowd roared and I heard someone cry out, "Will you look at the size of the basket on that son of a gun?" Naturally, I started to thank him, but then I saw he was pointing to the wicker basket beneath the balloon."

As Miss Adventure boarded the Tootie, a fan presented him with a large tin labeled "sharp cheese." Then, unexpectedly, the balloon took flight before Romano could climb aboard with provisions.

Andrews was swiftly borne away as Romano made the shocking discovery that the fan — undoubtedly the Masked Marble - had cut through the mooring ropes and sent the big bag of wind hurtling skyward.

Weekly World News learned what happened next thanks to Miss Adventure's diary which was found days later in an Oklahoma cornfield.

According to Andrews' desperate scribbles — which still included his distinctive dot-the-i smiley faces — the hero grew hungry after several hours of flight.

He opened the tin of sharp cheese only to have a sharp, spring-loaded knife shoot from within and puncture the balloon.

"The Tootie began to plummet toward the ground far below," Andrews wrote. "There was nothing left for me to do but put my mouth over the hole and puff as hard as I could to keep it aloft. It's a wideard. Andrews tried desperately to remain airborne by removing his clothes and using them to cover the hole.

It was a month aside Miss Adventure who accidentally invaded restricted air space over the White House in Washington, D.C. Jets were scrambled, causing Miss Adventure to climb on the lines and wave to them — quite a feat, since he was holding on with both hands.

At that point, however, the balloon ripped further, gave vent to the shield wherein for which all whoopie cushions are famous and, propelled by the wind, shot out of sight.

The entire affair created quite a stir. Lost in the hubbub was the sad fact that Kevin Andrews had vanished without a trace.

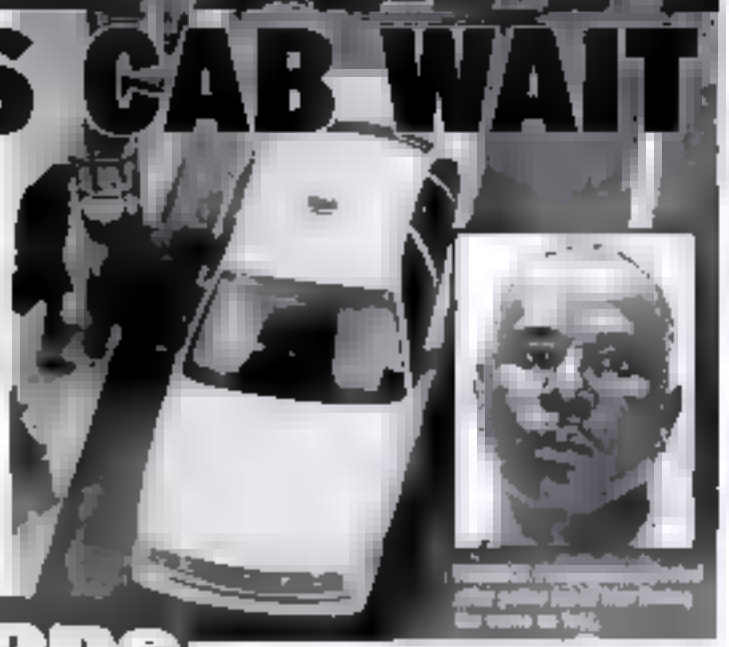
MAN MAKES CAB WAIT WHILE HE ROBS BANK



By DONAN WAGNER
Crime Reporter

COLUMBIA, S.C. — So maybe using a taxicab as a getaway vehicle isn't the smartest thing after all.

At least that's the experience Maurice Eugene Fields Jr., 30, had. His whole plan fell apart thanks to a quick-thinking cabbie and some tenacious bank customers.

Police said Fields called for a Checker Yellow taxi to pick him up at a bus transfer station. Veteran cab driver Michael Aira arrived shortly and drove his fare to South Carolina Community Bank.

According to Checker Yellow general manager Peyton Greene, trips from the bus station to the bank are very common.

After arriving at the destination, Fields asked Aira to wait for him while he stepped inside for a minute.

Once inside, a teller recalled Fields inquiring how much money was needed to open an account. After receiving his answer, he quietly stood in line to wait his turn.

When he approached the counter, however, it quickly became clear he had no intentions of doing honest business. Sgt. Dana Oree of the Columbia Police Department said Fields pulled what the FBI calls a "note job" and produced a handwritten note demanding money.

Fields "walked out of the bank with a fistful of money," she added, but would not disclose the exact amount.

Once outside, Oree said Fields attempted to get back in the cab, but a witness screamed to the driver: "Hey, that man just robbed the [redacted]. His accomplice [redacted]."

Aira, whose been driving for Checker Yellow since 1990, responded by simply removing his keys from the [redacted].

Realizing the taxi was no longer his way out, Fields fled on foot, followed closely by another bank customer witness.

After a fast-walking pursuit, he allegedly stopped in his tracks, gave the money to the pursuing customer and pleaded, "Just let me go."

But it was too little, too late. Three police cruisers closed in and Fields gave up without resisting and was charged with bank robbery.

The [redacted] was commended for his quick-thinking, but police advised citizens to be wary of getting personally involved in crime busters.

The obvious, however, was left unsaid: Bank robbers should really have more reliable transportation.

CRIME BLOTTER

OAKMAN: MY JEANS WERE TOO TIGHT

A Belle View, Pa., man told police the only reason he pointed a gun at them was because his jeans were too tight.

Sean Elden Duvall, 36, was arrested after cops found a .38 caliber revolver hiding between several magazines in his car. Duvall insisted he had a permit to carry a concealed weapon, but couldn't conceal it properly in his pants — as he is required — because they were too tight for the gun to fit comfortably in his pocket.

Duvall, however, felt he had done a good enough job of concealing it by sandwiching it between the publications.

"The magazines were the hood and the gun was the sled," he explained.

Sgt. Rage arrested him anyway and he was charged with aggravated assault and reckless endangerment.

MAN SINGLE-HANDEDLY CAUSES RISE IN CRIME

This is precisely why you should never underestimate the power of one.

Jason Wines is single-handedly responsible for raising the crime statistics in the quiet California town of Pleasant Oaks. Pop. 27,000.

Wines, 27, is a transient who has been living in the area for the past year, which is — according to officials — about half of the city's increase in major crimes.

CHILD ARRESTED, DETAINED

A one-year-old baby was arrested and jailed overnight in Madge.

Police said the baby was taken to prison after his father, Roger Segundo, was found trying to rob a supermarket. Segundo stuffed six bottles of vodka in the baby stroller and allegedly tried to wheel it out without paying.

"The policemen who got there first thought it was the right thing to do to list the baby as an accomplice, because the bottles were in his trolley," said a police spokesperson.

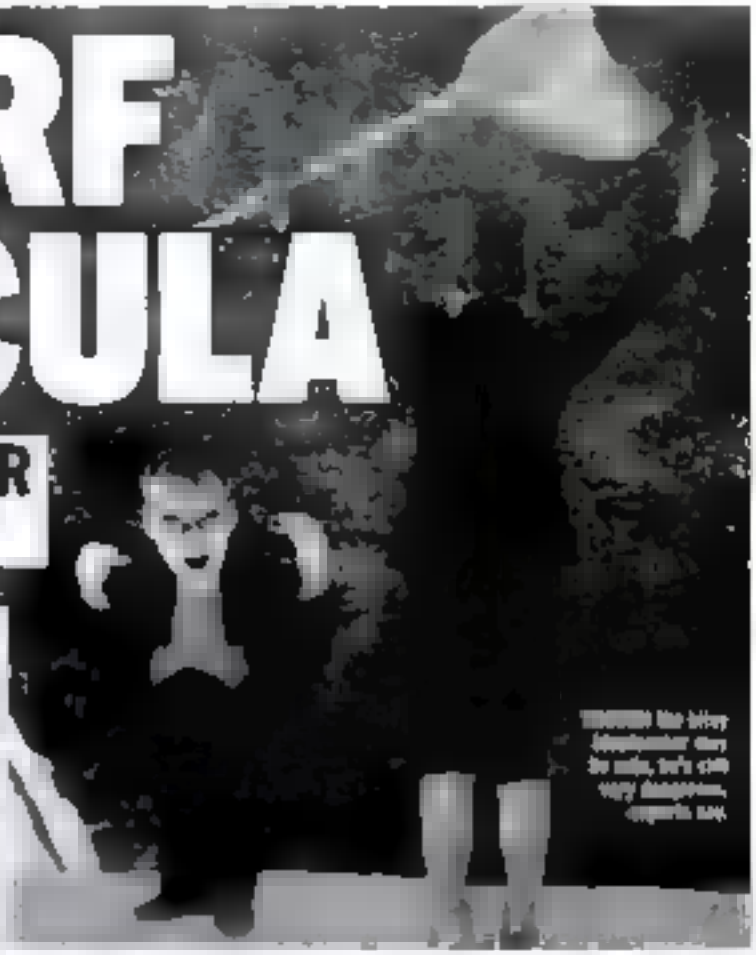
KNEE-HIGH ANKLE BITER TERRORIZING SEATTLE!



By JIM LEWIS

SEATTLE, Wash. — Emergency [redacted] physicians in this great northwestern city have been dealing with a rash of patients suffering from strange ankle bites. Dr. Scott Moore, an internist at Seattle General Hospital, told Weekly World News.

"Initially, we worked on the theory these were some sort of insect bites. We discovered that all the patients had recently been for walks through the botanical garden and crossed over the troll bridge."

Scientists from the Seattle School of Entomology were dispatched to the arboretum. What they found was no insect.

Dr. Jane Simons told WWN, "I was crossing the troll bridge with my bug net when 'he' popped up in front of me. I've seen enough horror movies to know right away that this fanged, caped [redacted] a vampire."

Except the mini-vampire was only three feet high.

Dr. Simons said, "No wonder he could only bite ankles." She slammed her net over him but he chewed right through and vanished into the thick foliage.

Dr. Simons' discovery brought a flurry of scientists to Seattle to study the diminutive Dracula. In an attempt to explain the presence of the little [redacted] said. "A dwarf strain of vampires has long been rumored.

"Around the world we have found evidence of discarded ammunition boxes being used as small coffins and wooden stakes as small as tooth picks. So we knew there were some little guys out there."

Regarding the discovery in Seattle, Dr. Orr said, "While vampires are nocturnal, the perpetual grayness of the Pacific Northwest seems to have provided this little fellow with a welcome shield from the sun."

When asked how the native from Transylvania might have ended up in the Seattle botanical garden Dr. Orr said, "I suspect he was accidentally transported in a box of Romanian dirt. The garden uses native plants and soil and Dr. Simons reports a lush growth of Romanian lilies."

Dr. Orr indicated the bite from this pocket-sized beast caused only low-grade reactions in his victims but also added, "This small-scale sucker is still highly dangerous even though he is sort of cute — like a baby [redacted] in [redacted]."

Arboretum officials are at a loss as to what to do with the diminutive plasma thief.

"Attendance has been way up since the discovery," said director Flora Bush. "We have posted warning signs but, frankly, people like to be scared. Nobody ever lost money giving the public what they want. And to be honest, we need the money along the paths," Dr. Orr suggested.

"That [redacted] protect the public but still give them a thrill when the vampire pops up and nips at their heels."

But the monster tornado was unforgiving. It moved across the farm, splintering every structure, and he was spinning up into the turbulence.

Days later, Ma Chu was found clinging to a tree some 30 miles away. The rest of his family is still missing.

"I don't know how I managed to stay alive," he said, choking back tears.

"It registered a staggering and unprecedented F-7 on the Pearson-[redacted] scale, which is like the Richter scale for earthquakes," FOAA scientist Dr. Gardner F. Thompson told WWN. "The wind speeds were more than 600 m.p.h. — that's nearly double the most powerful tornado ever recorded.

"According to the path of destruction — and the few survivors — the tornado moved at speeds of 200 m.p.h. and traveled more than 100 miles. It ripped through mountains to the West, sucking up village after village."

It was finally stopped when it reached the Convergence of Four Rivers at Lake Dongting, the largest body of water in the province. "It sucked up billions of [redacted] of lakewater," said Thompson. "Overwhelmed by the weight of [redacted] collapsed and then dissipated as [redacted] had been created."

But the [redacted] had already been done. More than 10,000 people died in 10 minutes. The Chinese government declared a state of emergency and sent a global SOS for relief. The International Red Cross and UN were soon on the [redacted], though all of the agencies agreed to keep news of the storm quiet.

"The reason is simple," Dr. Thompson said. "Due to global warming, the El Niño effect — the heating of the world's oceans — will grow more powerful. As it does, warm air from the seas and frigid air from the poles will produce more and more of these super-twisters. Computer models suggest that similar unstable weather patterns will strike parts of Spain, Mexico — and the American Midwest, sometime this August.

"I suggest we begin preparing for the unthinkable now," Dr. Thompson concluded. "Underground shelters need to be dug deeper and heavily reinforced, and a satellite-triggered early warning system needs to be put into place.

"Most of all," he added, "we have to cut back on the burning of [redacted]

Sweet revenge

Scientists discovered the remains of a previously unknown creature – an anteater-eater. This oversized animal had an uncanny resemblance to the average black ant, yet was believed to have weighed nearly a ton. Initial thoughts were that it ate anteaters.

"Without performing any in-depth analysis, we noticed a bulge in his belly," said excavation coordinator Sanford Biggins. "The shape of the bulge was characteristic of the shape of an anteater – a plump middle with an elongated snout."

Biggins said his team came to that conclusion because previous digs in the same southeast Asian region turned up piles of anteater remains. "We assumed the feast the beast had eaten was indeed an anteater, so we called him an "anteater-eater."

No other discoveries of anteater-eaters have ever been made. The remains Biggins dug up were preserved for years in a federal storage facility, but were misplaced, lost or stolen sometime after the Reagan administration.

across the room – said the London steakhouse manager. "I didn't even ask any questions. I just told the waitress we'd take care of them so I don't lose my business."

When the witches eventually asked for their bill and were told it was already paid, they cackled and flew out of the restaurant before the manager could realize his mistake. The broomsticks they rode out on eventually gave them away. They were too quick to be caught though, and the fooled manager was left to lament his costly mistake. "What a bunch of stupid witches," he muttered.

A man who claimed to be a descendant of Nostradamus woke up from a deep 23-year coma and predicted the extinction of the dodo bird. "A little late, dude," said the attending nurse. "Looks like you're the dodo. These things are already gone."

His next 32 predictions were all old news too.

Yostradamus, as he called himself, apparently fell into a coma long ago after stepping in front of a horse he failed to see coming. The horse tried to steer clear, but unfortunately the poor predictor was already trampled.

He was moved from one care facility to the next for more than two centuries. His case was taken to court several times over the years to have his feeding tube removed, but each time the decision was made to have him hang on "in case he had something Earth-saving to say when he comes to."

Rumors spread like wildfire that his specialty was in predicting imminent attacks and premature baldness. So far, however, nothing he'd said [redacted] newsworthy.

"I could pick up a dang encyclopedia and spew all the same stuff he's predicting right now," the nurse said. "I told

"My Boyfriend's SECRET ...for Amazing SEX!"

As a faithful reader of your magazine, I just had to tell your readers about a recent experience I had with my boyfriend.

First, let me just say he is a great guy. But, after dating for six months, it seemed he was having confidence issues in AND out of bed. It was having a real negative effect on his sexual prowess and let's face it, with any new relationship, it usually doesn't last very long without a real strong sexual connection. My dilemma was that I really liked the guy.

Thankfully, I didn't have to make a difficult decision because everything changed a few days ago. I came home from work and he basically tore my clothes off before I even made it through the door. Right there on the stairs he practically pounced on me. Confident, aggressive, he made all the right moves. I definitely felt sensations I'd never felt before ... in places I forgot existed. We made love for what seemed like an eternity. I never knew what some of my friends meant when they said the earth moved from raving sex – I do now. "I can honestly say it was the best sex I've ever had in my entire life!"

When I asked him what was going on – what brought about the change – he wouldn't answer me. I did what any red-blooded American woman would do. I started snooping. It didn't take me long to figure out his secret. In his underwear drawer under the "men's magazines", was a tube of Cellfiction. After reading the fine print and finding the website, I went online to www.connectfreetoday.com to discover more about this magic in a tube.

Connection (of which I'm having my boyfriend buy a lifetime supply!) is a lotion that is applied topically to the most intimate areas. An all natural mix of herbs and who knows what, brings blood flow straight to the source – that's when amazing things start to happen. He achieves harder, stronger erections and my orgasms go through the roof! We aren't into taking pills of any kind – not even aspirin – so I was relieved to find he was using something topical without any systemic side effects. Unless you want to think of great sex as a side effect because that's definitely what's going on at our place – ALL the time!

So please print this letter. Anyone who wants to experience mind-blowing intimacy has to try Connection. They need to tell their boyfriends, husbands or partners about this product. Or just "accidentally" leave a tube lying around for them to "accidentally" find. I really want to thank the women who developed Connection – only a woman could design something that feels this good.

One more important fact. I'm not sure if Connection is available yet in stores, but I do know you can get it by calling 1.800.273.5085 or you can visit www.connectfreetoday.

P.S. I know if you call today you can receive an additional 30-day supply at no cost with your order. I even think they have limited supplies of FREE trial samples available.

SHAKESPEARE TRANSLATED TO HIP-HOP FOR TODAY'S STUDENTS!

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Although Shakespeare is considered to be the greatest writer in the English language, today's students often resist reading and appreciating his work.

This stems primarily from the Elizabethan language, which students perceive as outdated,

ART EXPERT DETERMINES PICTURE'S WORTH: ONLY 923 WORDS!

By MARK MILLER

NAPLES, Italy – For centuries, the axiom, "A picture's worth a thousand words," has been accepted as the truth. "People felt that the typical painting was so filled with imagery, symbolism, and meaning that it would take 1,000 words to describe what was going on," explained Luigi Donatello, 67, curator of the The Pia Maria della Misericordia Art Gallery. "I've always wondered if that were true or whether people simply had a fixation for that big, clean number."

Over a five-year period, Donatello recruited thespians at art-lovers. He asked them to study five different paintings and write down all their thoughts and feelings. The paintings were: Da Vinci's Mona Lisa, Van Gogh's Starry Night, Whistler's Mother (Arrangement in Gray and Black), Michelangelo's Creation of Adam, and Gainsborough's The Blue Boy.

of words used in each, and averaged the word totals. "The average was wasted in his lazy – but what's the point?"

Italian historian Antony deCaesar has determined that the face of flowery and hard to understand.

However, at least one educator is being both sympathetic and proactive to these students' feelings. Adam Gilad, professor of Ethnic Studies at Harvard University, spent the past five years transposing the Bard's plays into more familiar jargon. His Hip-Hop Shakespeare, featuring all the plays and sonnets, will be published in autumn by Cambridge-Avon Princeton University Letters.

"I just want to do my small part to help make these wonderful, brilliant works more accessible," said Gilad.

An excerpt from Romeo and Juliet illustrates just how mad cra and vital Shakespeare's plays can be when presented in this format:

"Ay yo trip, what wack light through yonder window is beeyaa.

"It be the East and Juliet is my sun-sweetest fly def honey. Word."

Another example from Julius Caesar practically leaps off the page with its energy:

"Homeboys, brothers, and players, wassup? — Dig.

"I'm here to put the dude Caesar in the boneyard, not be down wit' him. Truethat."

And, of course, what many consider to be Shakespeare's greatest play, Hamlet, becomes fully alive when presented in hip-hop:

"To bail out, or not to bail out: That be the buzz.

"Whether it's phat to be trippin' to catch the vapors of dis big-spendin' cheese.

"Or fo'shizzle, grab the bling bling, bounce back to the crib and just be chillin'."

A TRUE FU FARM!

By LENNY WEE

TOPEKA, Kan. — There are many farms in Kansas. What makes the spread of Dr. George Allowell special is that it's a clinic for mentally disturbed animals.

"Farm animals are vulnerable to many types of emotional problems," said Dr. Allowell. "It's only recently that farmers have started to take notice."

A farmer turned animal psychologist, Dr. Allowell founded the "Funny Farm" after one of his horses committed suicide.

"Missy broke out of her stall one morning and ran right into the street," he said. "She was hit by a truck and died. What I didn't realise at the time was that Misty was manic-depressive. She wasn't sleeping and was showing bad judgment by piddling on the bale and kicking farmhands who were carrying guns. Had I picked up on it earlier I could have saved her life."

Since then Dr. Allowell has dedicated his life to treating disturbed animals.

"You know it stands to reason that an animal would be depressed after pulling a plow all day," he said. "Or was stuck in a chicken coop. They can't go down to Mavis for a drink. The mean in particular are in a rut."

Dr. Allowell showed us around the Funny Farm. His stable had been turned into a series of padded walls for the Pig," he said. "She suffers from obsessive compulsive disorder — just terrified of getting dirty. Her former owner used to call her 'Dorito Sheryl.' I'm gradually introducing mild types of dirt into her diet — mud, then silt, then fertilizer, then mud, then more slop. She'll be playing in a pig sty in no time."

In the next stall was a chicken named Cluckpox. He was hiding his head under a blanket.

"Cluckpox is suffering from post traumatic stress," Allowell said. "His previous owner tried to chop his head off. He's also afraid the sky is falling. I take him out for short periods each day, during which time he wears a tiny tin foil helmet. I've also been empowering him with exercises to strengthen his neck muscles. It's O.K. to be a chicken but not a chicken," I tell him."

By then was Dr. Allowell's most challenging patient, Betsy. The cow was suffering from severe psychosis and was kept in a strait jacket for her own protection.

"Betsy is a classic mad cow, suffering chronic hallucinations involving alien abduction and aliens are kind to her. Over time, that will alienate her herd."

We asked Dr. Allowell when he last cured an animal.

"Actually, I just ended the was under the delusion that all of her fellow sheep were really wolves wearing their clothing. We cured her and then sent her off to slaughter." He shrugged.

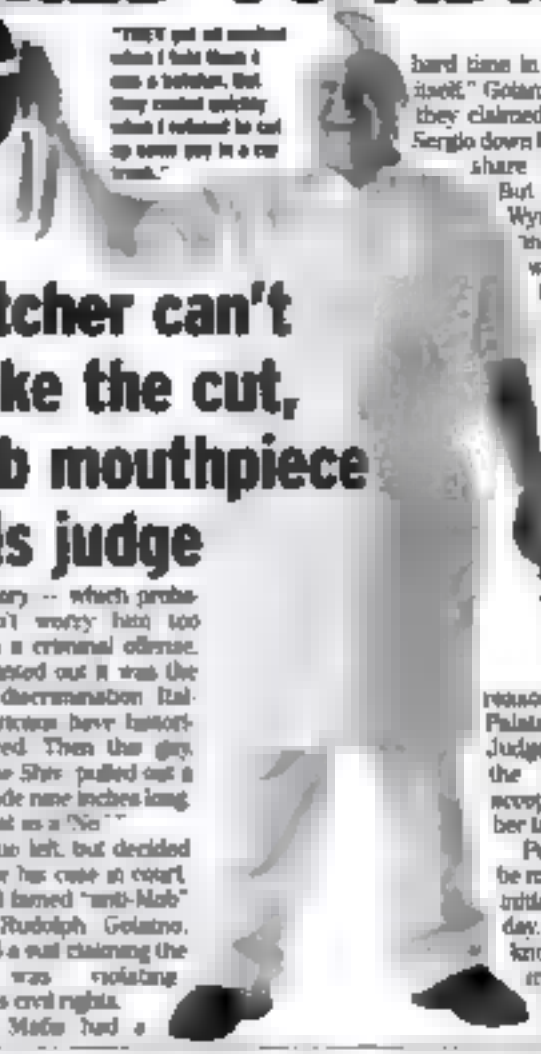
LADY JUSTICE CARRIES A DOUBLE-EDGE SWORD

MAFIA ORDERED TO ADMIT LAW-ABIDING CITIZENS

By BONNIE FYLE



"THEY got all excited when I told them I was a butcher, but they cooled quickly when I refused to cut up some guy in a car trunk."

Butcher can't make the cut, Mob mouthpiece tells judge

BAYONNE, N.J. — "Every time I tried to get in, they pulled me back out."

That's what Sergio Palatzo, a butcher told a federal [illegible] he filed a suit against the Mafia for refusing to let him join the organization. [illegible] he's a law abiding citizen.

Judge Pamela Wyatt agreed, and ordered the Mafia to admit Palatzo immediately.

"I love The Sopranos, and I thought how much I'd like to hang out with Tony, Christopher and the rest of those guys," Palatzo told Weekly World News. "Plus, I've watched all The Godfather movies 50 times — except for the third one, which I've only watched once.

"I know I would fit right in — except for the fact that I've never broken the law in my life, and don't intend to.

"So I went down to Big Al's Social Club on Main Street, where the Mafia are known to hang out, and applied for membership."

At first, Palatzo said, the Mafia refused to admit they existed. "But then I said, 'If you don't exist, then who am I talking to right now?' They looked at each other and said, 'You know, you're right. I guess we do exist.'

"Then Big Al asked me what my 'specialty' was, and I told him I'm a butcher. They got all excited and said they had a job for me immediately, involving some guy who was waiting in the trunk of a car. But then I said, 'Oh, you misunderstood. I'm a real butcher. I work in a supermarket, cutting up lamb chops.'

"Big Al was still convinced I was talking in 'code,' but when he realized I was telling the truth he told me, 'We can't take you. We only take criminals.'

"I told Bill that [illegible] criminatory — which probably didn't worry him too much as a criminal offense, but I pointed out it was the kind of discrimination Italian-Americans have historically faced. Then the guy 'Louie the Shiv' pulled out a shiny blade nine inches long. I took that as a 'No.'"

Palatzo left, but decided to pursue his case in court. He hired famed "anti-Mob" lawyer Rudolph Golatno, who filed a suit claiming the Mafia was violating Palatzo's civil rights.

"The Mafia had a hard time in court defending itself," Golatno said. "Initially, they claimed to have turned Sergio down because he didn't share their interests. But when Judge Wyatt asked what 'interests' they were talking about, the mobsters couldn't answer.

"What were they going to say? 'Sergio doesn't like extorting money, whacking people and hijacking cigarette shipments off trucks?'"

Left without a valid reason for refusing Palatzo membership, Judge Wyatt ordered the butcher to be accepted as a member immediately.

Palatzo couldn't be more excited. "My initiation is this Friday. I can't wait. All I know is they told me it involves cement shoes and a river."

SANTA TO DELIVER PRESENTS

THE NORTH POLE — In a nod to changing realities, Santa Claus announced that he will no longer be making house calls, but instead will be delivering presents via e-mail.

By SCOTT STEVENS

"I'm getting too old for the chimney scene," Santa said, from his home in the North Pole. "Delivering presents to all the world's children in one night is too exciting, especially when you have to run on all fuel by the other 364 days a year. They're unfortunate and all, but their tiny hands can only do so much.

"Plus, there are more children in more places than ever before," Santa went on.

"The sheer volume of presents was getting unwieldy. Being Santa is a young man's game.

"But the main reason I'm switching to delivering presents by e-mail is because of the security hassles and hassles."

In recent years, because of the war on terror, the U.S. government has increased its air surveillance, and in 2006, an over-eager Air Force pilot tried to shoot Santa from the sky.

"That really freaked me out," Santa said. "Luckily, Rudolph, Queen Vixen Cody, and the elves were tipped off a warning that a war on delivering presents, and took evasive action."

But Santa Claus has also been hit with a number of lawsuits from parents, who allege that his delivery style has damaged their chimney, when he drops down, or don't like the idea of a fat old man trying to enter their children's girls.

"The Midland Jamboree that really got a lot of parents pretty mad. I don't mind that part," Santa said. He shook his great furry head. "We try to do something nice for people and this is the thanks you get."

Santa said his representatives are currently working hard to deal with the issues.

"We considered several alternatives," one of the elves said, on condition of anonymity.

"We thought we could spread the delivery of presents out over two or three days, but that didn't fly. We also considered giving out decals of Santa with a red circle and a line through him, similar to those 'No smoking' signs, that homes could post if they didn't want Claus coming down their chimneys. But then we'd have to AUGUSTA, Maine – Most children know how Goldilocks entered the house of the three bears, ate their food, sat in their chairs, slept in their beds and fled when they returned home. What children don't know is that Goldilocks was guilty of chronic breaking and entering.

"It's been two years but our son is really messed up because of this," said Papa Bear. "That horrible girl ate all his breakfast and broke his favorite chair to pieces. And forget about going to bed. He screams, 'There's a little girl in it! She's going to get me!'

Though prior history was not admitted at the trial, Weekly World News has learned that Goldilocks has had many run-ins with the bear community.

HOOFING IT!

New footwear for horses

By MICHAEL BOYD

HOUSTON, Tex. — Each year hundreds of people are injured while riding horses. After years of study, equine podiatrist Sue Halter has pinpointed the main cause for these accidents: Horseshoes.

"The typical metal horseshoe is the worst protection for a horse's hooves," Halter said. "It's outdated. Would you want metal against your sole all day and night? And held in with nails?"

To solve the problem Halter has created a new type of horseshoe. She displayed her invention on her horse Nike. Four white sneakers, similar to human footwear but more compact.

"I wanted to call them 'Nikes,' after my horse but there was a legal problem with that," she admitted. "Instead I call them Hetlockers and they solve a number of problems. There is more support — especially in the high-top model — giving the horse better balance. There's a lot more cushion taking the shock off its knees which will give the horse a few more years of comfortable mobility. And the soles grab the ground firmly which will cut down on the number of falls."

She added that her shoes would eliminate the need to clean dirt and rocks from a horse's feet.

"I really noticed a difference," said jockey Henry Wald, who took Nike for a turn around the track. "The horse had more bounce to him. His grip was incredible. He accelerated more quickly and his top speed was impressive."

Dianne Maine, a competitor and horse breeder, was also enthusiastic.

"I could tell right the horse was happier," she said. "He had a lot of stamina and the ride was definitely smoother."

Halter has a waiting list for her horseshoes and is also developing other types of footwear for different occasions.

"I'm designing horse sandals for the summer, horse snowshoes for the winter, and horse flippers for areas prone to flooding."

One thing Sue did not count on was the aesthetic aspect of her concept.

"People are trying to make a fashion statement with their horses," she told us. "I'm getting requests for horse boots, even horse high heels. The last thing we need are more poseurs, but as long as it makes the horse happy, I'm all for it."

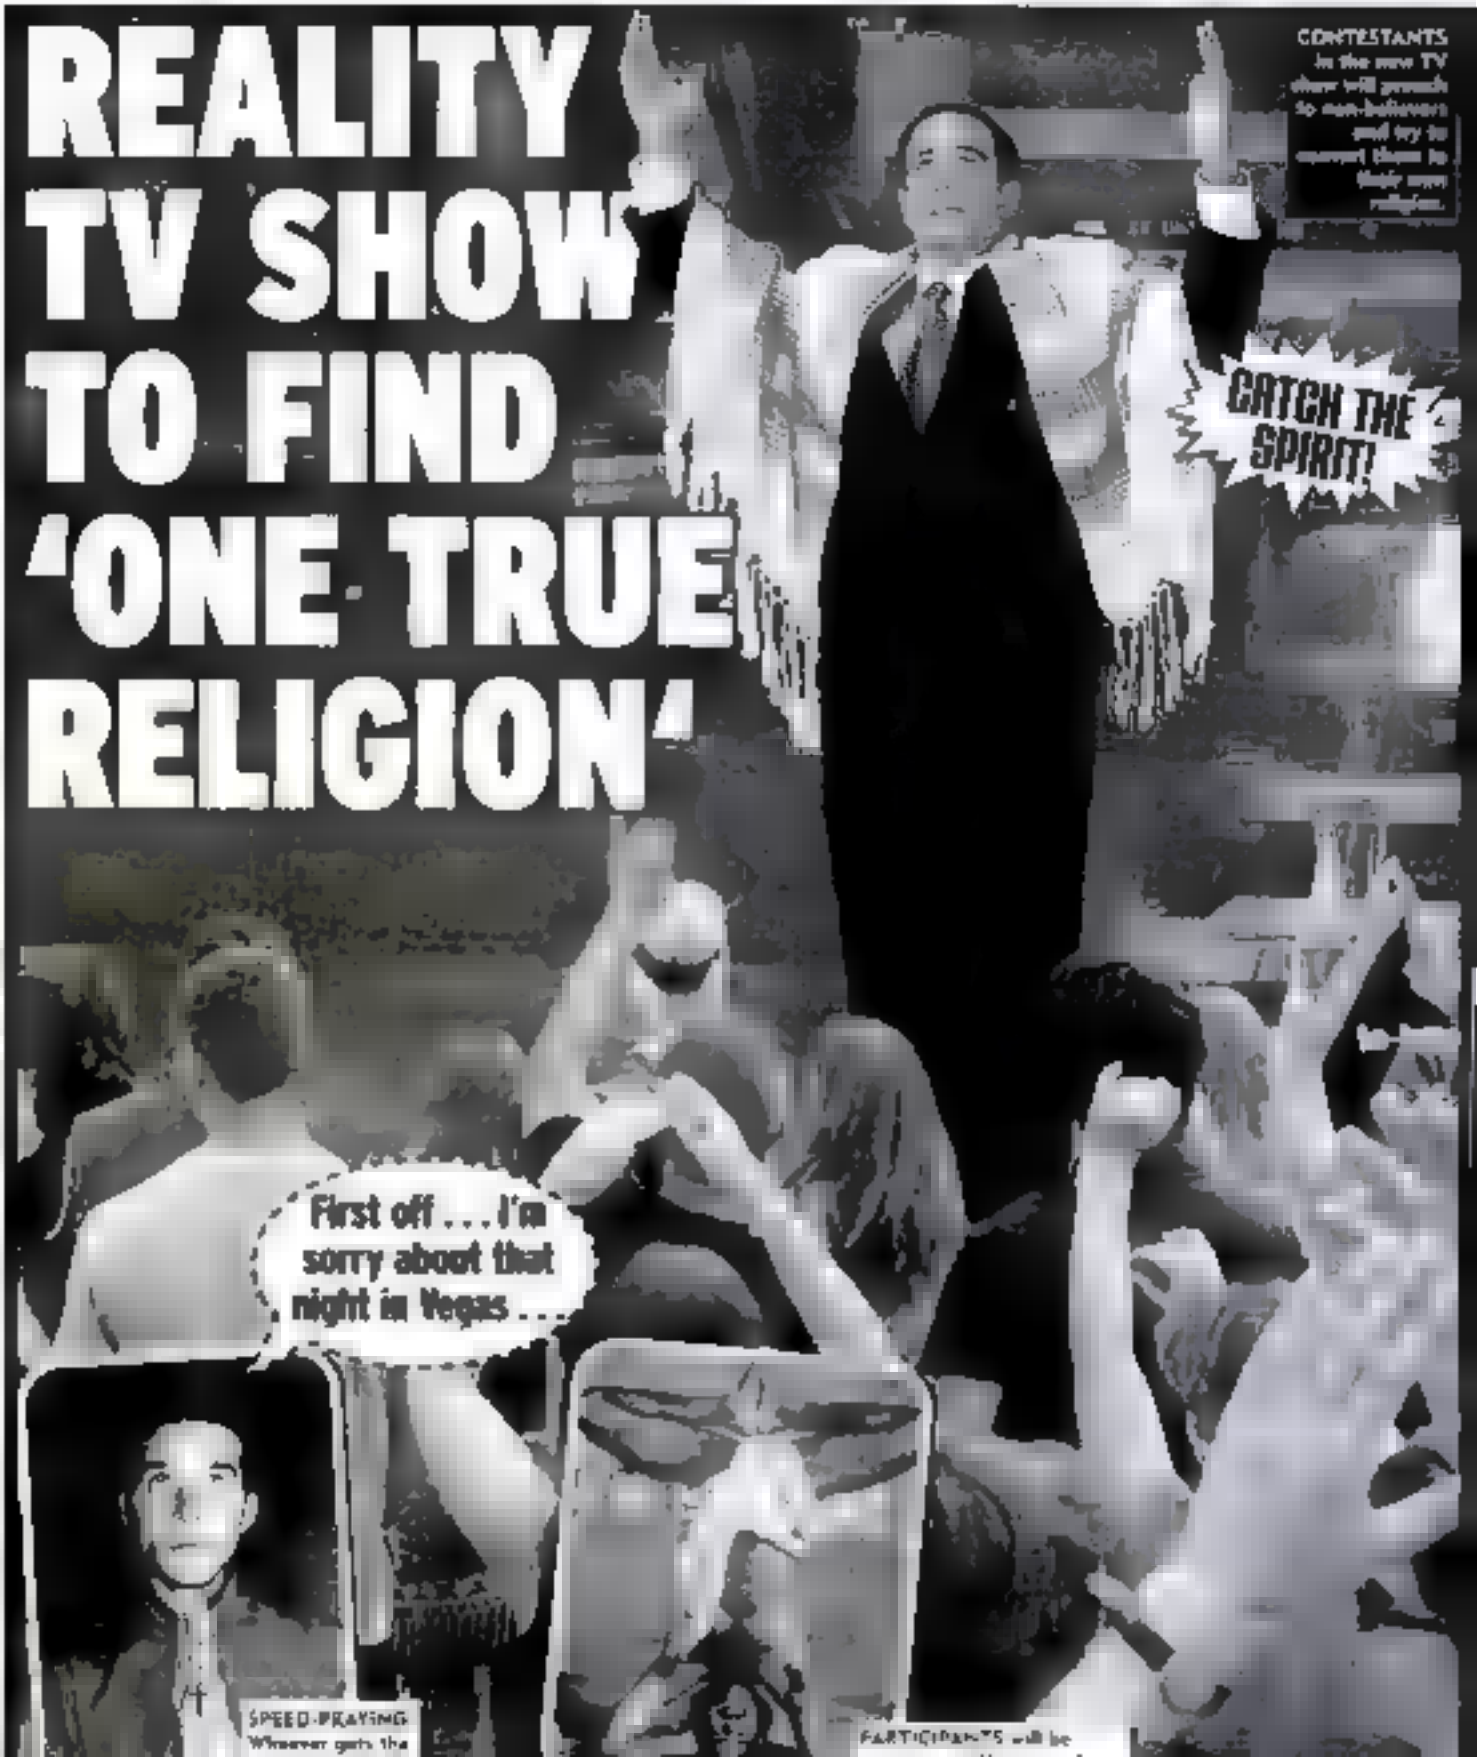
REALITY TV SHOW TO FIND 'ONE TRUE RELIGION'



By JAKE ANDERSON

[redacted] —

Move over, Survivor, Fear Factor and The Bachelor. A new reality show promises to transform the entire world by finding the one true religion.

[redacted] American [redacted] four contestants [redacted] different faiths will compete against each other.

Producer Benn Hodgekiss said he got the idea for the show after watching the network news one night [redacted] Survivor.

"All the stories were about Kurds quarreling with Shi'ites, Jews debating Palestinians, the religious right in America fighting everyone else. I thought 'Geo, no dur-vivor they argue and compete against each other, too, but no one gets killed and at the end of the season there's a clear winner. Wouldn't it be great if we could get all the world's religions to do the same?"

It took Hodgekiss three years to pull American Navelled together.

"There are a lot more religions than you might think," Hodgekiss said. "And they all have different Sabbaths where they don't work, and some have rituals during the day, or don't allow their members to fraternize with members of the opposite sex. Just coordinating all the groups [redacted]

[redacted] a couple of the contests the show will have.

SPEED-PRAYING: Each week, competing contestants will be handed a list of seven items such as hard-to-get concert tickets, an 1800 silver dollar, a new car, etc. Contestants will then pray for those items in a public place. Each week's winner will be the person who has the most prayers answered.

CATCH-THE-SPIRIT: Contestants will preach to crowds of 100 "non-believers" and try to convert them through sheer force of personality. Whoever converts the most audience members wins.

RUNNING RITUALS: Participants will run a "religious obstacle course," in which they have to stop at various points to pray and put on various articles of religious clothing. Winner is the first person to perform all the rituals and cross the finish line.

EMBARRASSING RELIGIOUS MOMENT: Contestants will reveal the worst transgression they ever performed against their religion, and ask the audience for forgiveness. "Most Forgiven" will be determined by audience applause.

After a winner is crowned, Hodgekiss said he expected almost every [redacted] the world would join the [redacted]religion.

"The whole [redacted] is going to be praying to different Gods, but only one will answer. Who wouldn't want to go with the winner?"

But some religious scholars have objected, questioning whether God will even be aware of the show.

Hodgekiss dismissed them. "There's no way God won't be watching," Hodgekiss said. "This is gonna be huge."

TIDE

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In an unprecedented, multibillion-dollar class-action lawsuit, the United States is being sued by several major cruise ship lines for the billions in revenue they lost when the U.S. drained the Atlantic Ocean to repair major leaks.

"I am shocked, dismayed and appalled that a major superpower such as the United States would have the gall to destroy the livelihoods of millions of people by removing all of the water from the world's second largest ocean," stated Randall B. Cronin, a highly respected attorney from the law firm of Schwartz, Chang & Gonzales, which is representing the cruise lines. A spokesperson for the U.S. government, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, told Weekly World News, "We had no choice been sucked down giant abysses leading to the center of the earth. When the cold sea water hit the molten core, our planet would have cracked like a giant egg."

The man who spearheaded the massive repair job was Dirk Johnson, owner of Dirk's Pool & Spa Maintenance. The 27-year-old former surfer and chain saw juggler said, "The feds came to me because, y'know, I could go on TV and explain what up. They offered me all the manpower I needed working with my own posse." Johnson and his buddies spent months on the operation. They pumped trillions of gallons of water into giant storage tanks which were shipped to Iceland for safekeeping. Sea creatures, big and small, were captured and delivered to aquaria around the globe.

"When we ran out of room, I put a bunch of plankton in my bathtub," Johnson said. "That's the level of dedication I'm talkin' 'bout."

Geologist Nathan Freeman was amazed by the entire undertaking. "You've got to hand it to Johnson and his crew," he said. "No oceanographer would have had the gumption to tackle something this big. It took a man of Johnson's unique 'interesting' intellect to jump right in patched the giant ocean cracks with SuperStick Adhesive concoction Johnson developed while repairing his surfboard. It sticks to anything and dries in 48 hours.

"It was like putting a human gauze bandage on a giant's wound," Johnson recalled.

Days later the water was carefully poured back into the ocean basin and all the sea life was replaced. "Man, what a rush that was," Johnson said.

Now that the giant leaks in the Atlantic have been fixed, the world's airlines are in a panic.

"We're terrified the U.S. is going to tackle air pollution next and ask Johnson to suck the dirty air out of the atmosphere with a nuclear-powered pool vacuum or something," gasped a nervous spokesperson for Rancid Airlines. "Without air, planes can't fly. The

MULLET

OFFICIALS in Germany have [redacted] the U.K. for soldiers to [redacted] mullets [redacted] serving in the [redacted].

The military previously forced soldiers to wear their hair short, effectively banning mullets. But the rule has since been declared "unconstitutional" and "incomprehensible" – thanks to an 18-year-old recruit who was forced to chop off his 10-inch ponytail.

The young man was fined and threatened with three weeks of solitary confinement for his dodgy hairstyle. Determined to [redacted] her his rights, he took his case to the courts and won, giving army recruits the freedom of wearing the mighty mullet once and for all.

COUCH POTATOES

POTATO farmers in Britain are getting all mashed up over the term "couch potato."

About 30 farmers have publicized their request for the derogatory term to be removed from the Oxford English Dictionary.

The current definition is "a person who spends leisure time passively or idly sitting around, especially watching television or videotapes." The British Potato Council thinks this makes their vegetables seem unhealthy and are asking it be changed to "couch slouch."

"The potato industry are fed up with the disservice that 'couch potato' does to our product when we have an inherently healthy product," said one member.

3. GIVE ME A BOOST

A COLLEGE study has revealed the consumption of energy drinks has nearly surpassed the national consumption of coffee.

"Younger people are choosing to drink fruity or carbonated drinks like Red Bull instead of coffee to give them a boost during the day," said survey coordinator Jacob Conti. "Coffee is a staple with the older crowd, but the popularity of these new drinks is quickly threatening to overtake the number of coffee drinkers."

Conti said specialty coffee drinks such as lattes and cappuccinos were not figured into the equation because

A 95-YEAR-OLD man has broken the world record for the 100-meter dash.

Kaze Haraguchi, of Miyazaki, Japan, ran the [redacted] in the fastest time ever for a man in his 90 to 99 age group. His incredible speed of 22.04 shattered the previous 22.01 sprint held by an Australian man.

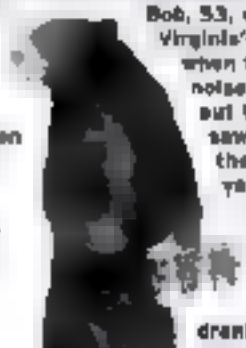
Haraguchi said he felt the pressure during the amazing race. "I thought I better not fall because everyone was cheering for me," he said.

The new record-holder began practicing [redacted] at the age of 85 to stay in shape and regularly takes hour walks around his neighborhood.

5. A BEAR AND HIS BEER

TWO men on a fishing trip were given the surprise of their lives when their camping site was attacked by a big black bear that chomped on their food and guzzled their beer.

Larry Spencer, 67, said



Bob, 53, were at West Virginia's Summit Lake when they heard a noise and peeked out the tent and saw the bear drag their cooler 30 yards and fling it open, scattering a case of Coors Light.

"He only drank three cans," Larry said. "He would've drank it all

BE A WISER RISER

WAKING ON THE WRONG SIDE OF BED WILL RUIN YOUR DAY!

By [redacted]

[redacted], [redacted], — Burt Skowel [redacted] always depressed in the morning after getting out of bed.

"I'd start my day feeling that life [redacted] no purpose," Skowel told Weekly World News. "I thought it was because of my job, or being middle-aged, or just being chronically depressed. But it turned out to be something else."

He made an appointment with Dr. [redacted] Young, a psychiatrist known for his unorthodox view of psychology.

"I examined Mr. Skowel thoroughly," Dr. Young told us, "and I'm convinced he is suffering [redacted] a newly discovered disorder I call [redacted] (Post Arising Trauma). In layman's [redacted] he literally got up on the 'wrong side of the bed.'"

PAT has met with [redacted] by the psychiatric community.

"Dr. [redacted] says stay in bed," said [redacted] Triplehorn of the American Sleep [redacted] in Ogden, [redacted]. "His ideas are [redacted] and unsupportable."

"I can't [redacted] PAT," Dr. Sherry [redacted] University of Stepney, [redacted] answered.

[redacted] pooh-pooh all the criticism. "Sounds like some people [redacted] up on the [redacted] side of the bed," he said. "The fact is, when a person awakens from sleep his brain is like [redacted] sponge, ready to soak up the experiences of the day. The most powerful influence on a person's mood is the choice of which side of the bed they get out on.

"Two [redacted] are the correct [redacted] of the bed from [redacted] a person [redacted] get out," he said. "The most basic is whether the individual is right- or left-handed. It seems [redacted] who exit the bed on the [redacted] of their [redacted] hand [redacted]."

Dr. Young explained that it's a matter of balance.

"To start the day in opposition to one's dominant side affects the inner ear fluid that regulates equilibrium. This imbalance has an adverse effect on a person's emotional state."

[redacted] Skowel is right-handed and he's been getting out on the right [redacted] the bed for years.

"That [redacted] up the second cause of PAT," Dr. Young said. "Political orientation."

One of Dr. Young's patients, Jack Hurly, [redacted] recently cured of extreme depression.

"I consider myself a radical conservative, and I've been getting out of bed on the left side for years," Hurley said. "No wonder I've been so grumpy [redacted] morning."

Dr. Young recommends that a person who is politically moderate should get out at the foot of the bed.

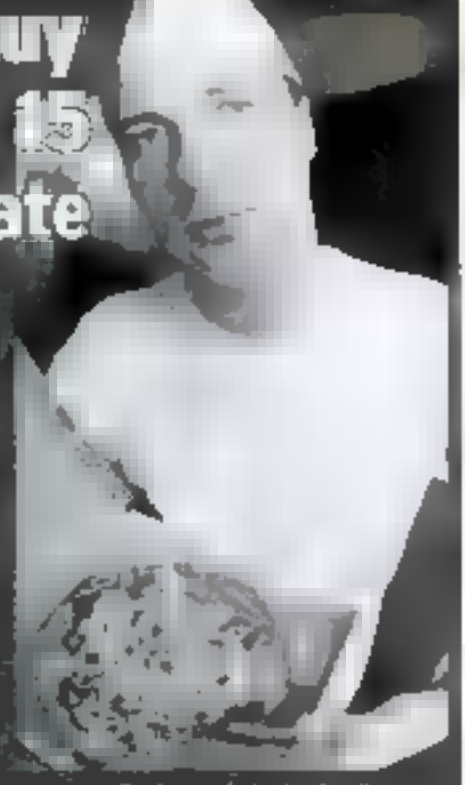
Pizza guy arrives 15 years late

By [redacted]



VAN NUYS, Calif.— Mario Harper, 40, ordered a pizza in 1990. It arrived 15 years late.

"Darn thing is it couldn't even make the Internet," [redacted] since 1997."

When Buddy Wade Avery confused Domenic's Pizza Parlor and Italian Deli to discover what caused the delay, 15-year-old Bobby Avery, the Cindy spokesperson, explained, "It's 15 years old, except it tastes like it's Saturday night and this chick calls in an extra large pizza with pepperoni, garlic, mushrooms, onions and pineapple. I tossed it into my Pinto and went off. The phone from Harper's house, I quit it flat.

"This gorgeous blonde, Charla, picks up the phone. I tell her I'm a delivery dude and ask if I should ride. Two days later I'm still married the girl. We really hit it off.

"I end up waiting for two old men, who take our pizza order. I'm not quite sure where he got one. But someone in geek. I make lots of money. He and Charla buy a nice house in Encino and start a family.

"Three kids and 15 years later the old man gets arrested and I've got an erection. Charla passes me the cry protection pillow and I'm out. I'm back at Domenic's. Wow, my boss, tells me I'm to be such a schmuck and he sends us all the people I screwed over by dropping off the order screen."

While waiting [redacted] days later, Harper stopped at Harper's house to give her some cheesed liver on a place offering. They hit it off, and she invited him to stay in. "Charla, those five other places in my Pinto will have to wait," said a grinning Harper.

Rickshaw racing hits the wall, the Great Wall!

By JEP LEWIS

BEIJING, China — According to secret reports obtained by Weekly World News, Beijing is cracking down hard on Chinese teens who are recklessly racing rickshaws on the Great Wall.

Every Saturday night, just as in America, racers congregate at a prearranged spot. They come with their souped-up chaises, fuel and drink a little snake rice wine, then race. Now there is the added thrill of staying one step ahead of government officials trying to shut them down.

A student who waived to remain anonymous told WWN, "There is great pride and status among young people in a chaise well pulled. The government is full of stuffy old men who go on about 'the Long March' and just don't understand."

Like their American racing brethren, the drivers do whatever they can to give themselves an edge, adding rubber to their larger than street-legal wooden wheels and wearing heavy-duty air filter masks for maximum pure oxygen intake.

A government official said the racing has been stopped, the main organizers sent to a reeducation camp and the rickshaws stripped down and returned to the taxi fleet.

"We need to stamp out Western influences," the official told us. "Next they'll have tuxes down. Besides, the crashes were causing serious damage to the wall."

Tourists have smuggled out photos of the chopped ancient relic. Some testament to the high-competitive nature of the new banned sport.

One tourist commented, "It gives new meaning to hitting the wall."

Officials may think they've shut down the rickshaw racers but the diehards still defy the ban. A Chinese [illegible] producers attempting to cash in on the fad, and inspired by The Fast and The Furious has started production on The Encroachers: Sons Angels and The Middle Ages. It's said to be a big hit in the People's Republic. The writers'

MAILBOX GOES POSTAL

By FRED STAMP

ATLANTA, Ga. – On the corner of Spring and Fifth Street is a mailbox that people claim is alive.

"At first the lid wouldn't open, like it was magnetically sealed!" said George Dupee who had tried to mail a letter to his mother.

Pauline Pfizer, an elderly woman, insisted that her dog was electrocuted when he sniffed the box.

Mail collector Fred Stevens said he is well aware of the problem.

"Damn thing almost bit my hand off," he said. "I everyone must be crazy, huh?"

After a half-hour investigation, the city mail electrician Harry Smith investigate the phenomenon. "When I approached the mailbox it started to shake," he said. "Then lightning and electrical sparks shot from the slot."

After the professional left, Smith was found to be [illegible]

"City power lines run right under the box," he said. "There was obviously enough of the [illegible] causing the mailbox to become electrically charged, like a charged power box."

The power lines were repaired that day, and the mail began to flow again. But Fred Stevens was still uneasy.

"I think it's possessed!"

ARIES
Mar. 21 – Apr. 19

Host a blast or brief visit for a flick with staple. It'll help show your sense of adventure and stretching your creativity. All you need is a simple twist of fate.

Plunge ahead on that top secret project you've been shrouding with and don't get tangled up in blue.

Don't get moody, but be forearmed with shoes to outbounty. A small dog bares fangs.

TAURUS
Apr. 20 – May 20

Your words and your conscience carry extra weight now. A brave beam a stranger could really help with a problem that's been bugging you.

Avoid driving late this week.

Something from TV or radio could really get your creative juices flowing and provide a key to financial independence. But don't be moody — or you'll blow it.

GEMINI
May 21 – June 20

Someone close to you could be touchy and difficult to deal with now.

Choose your words carefully or you'll be putting your foot. You may be tempted to gamble with something you really treasure. Don't do it unless it involves the color green and the letter E.

This week can be a winner if you follow instructions and look both ways before you cross.

CANCER
June 21 – July 22

Be attentive to new acquaintances over the next few days. One will prove helpful to your moral self-esteem.

The color yellow can be lucky for you and the number 9 could figure into some financial gain for you in the near future.

Concentrate on gossip this week — this is an excellent time to make monetary gains.

Remember, owls fly at night!

LEO
July 23 – Aug. 22

An uncomfortable personal hygiene situation may make dealings with a friend or family member difficult. Your concern for others should carry you through.

If you're feeling tricky, this is a good time to strengthen your ownership prospects. Use your mind instead of your hand when dealing with your credit life this week.

VIRGO
Aug. 23 – Sept. 22

Be ready to grab a profitable financial opportunity that may come your way in the very near future.

Get sound advice from neighbors before doing out cash. You have reason that isn't being used.

This could be the week to launch a creative project or get your pen off the blocks. Your sensitivity to people's problems is admirable, but it's ultimately fruitless.

LIBRA
Sept. 23 – Oct. 22

A creative spark could ignite significant changes in your life if you follow your instincts and pay attention to the letter F this week. First impressions may prove to be extremely important and you would be wise to take notice of someone who appears unsavory.

An unusual offer might be presented to you shortly and you should notify authorities.

SCORPIO
Oct. 23 – Nov. 21

All signs indicate that an exciting new challenge is likely to come your way in the week ahead. Your optimism saves and a chance encounter.

A stubborn streak could lead to trouble — or a solution. Avoid sensitive problems by standing up for yourself. You may be saddened when long-standing plans are derailed, but smile and move.

Do you have a passion?

SAGITTARIUS
Nov. 22 – Dec. 21

The difficulties you've had to deal with should disappear this week when relatives leave.

You've suffered more than your fair share, but things will get back to normal if you're aware of possible legal pitfalls.

Keep a stiff upper lip and remember that we've all just died in the wind. Single out a trusted friend and borrow some funds if need be.

CAPRICORN
Dec. 22 – Jan. 19

Make every effort this week to get a firm grip on your temper. It is stifling your efforts to meet your goals. Someone — or something — out there is trying to make contact. Concentrate on this ability in order to break on through to the other side.

Don't let conversational feelings interfere with your determination to achieve financial independence.

AQUARIUS
Jan. 20 – Feb. 18

You've on the right track and have hidden mysterious powers. Dance with a stranger this week. While your friends and loved ones appreciate your quiet strength, it's time to let them see your superior nature.

Forget those chores you've been postponing — hire someone else to do them. Pottering about in the yard will only lead to an embarrassing accident.

PISCES
Feb. 19 – Mar. 20

Splurge on a lottery ticket or bingo game — but not the stock market. Your lucky number is 17!

Use your effervescent glow to your advantage this week and search for suitors. You've been hiding it because of so-called "medical problems."

It would do you good to smash all one afternoon to an art museum, concert or all-night betting operation.

If your birthday is this week . . .

The year ahead will be a roller-coaster ride of adventure. Hard work will pay off — keeping a cool head in the face of a lawsuit will see you through.

MATH ERROR DESTROYS U.S. SPY SATELLITE

— ARABIC NUMERALS SUSPECTED!

By GLADE PERMAT

MUDDLESBERG AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — A spy satellite aboard the Air Force's new Nimrod IV rocket exploded minutes after launch when one of the rocket's fuel tanks overheated.

Air Force investigators cited a simple math mistake in the design of the fuel tank as the cause of the explosion. But no one has placed blame on the rocket's builders.

"We don't want to cause undue alarm," said Muddlesberg Chief Master Sergeant Roll Cratney. "But the numerals we used in designing the spacecraft — the same numbers we all use to pay our taxes, or even observe the Fourth of July — first came to us from Arab traders who visited Europe in the 11th century A.D. And now, a terrifying number of things in free society depend on these foreign-report leaked to Weekly World News, the threat of "sleeper numerals" has forced U.S. officials to consider eliminating the Arabic system from all Department of Defense projects, and eventually from the country as a whole.

But an anonymous U.S. military source admitted that the initiative has had little success so far. "We thought about switching to the Roman numeral system, but that would have meant enormous royalties to the Vatican, which has been using the numerals in encryption systems for centuries."

Instead, the Nimrod V rocket — a pilot project in non-Arabic-numeral engineering — will be designed entirely with simple scratch marks. The marks

Guru drives 3-foot sword through his head!

Onlookers gasp with astonishment when holy man Ram Singh walks through the streets of Colombo, Ceylon, with a three-foot-long sword through his head!

The religious zealot says he learned the feat from another holy man and won't divulge how he does it. But witnesses can clearly see that the razor-sharp blade has been driven through his scalp and skull, and blood drips constantly from the horrifying wound.

Singh, 34, has been practicing his gruesome specialty for seven years. He first tried it in 1988 after making a vow to his Hindu god to publicly demonstrate his faith in return for the survival of his ailing wife. The religious martyr makes a pilgrimage through the city every two months, followed by crowds of jeering, cheering supporters.

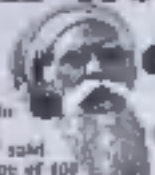
Swami lives 6 days on bottom of a lake!



A 30-year-old guru meditated on the bottom of a lake for six full days, then surfaced in shore unharmed!

"It's a miracle," said Seshagiri Bhatt, one of 400 people who stood vigil by the shores of the 60-foot deep lake in Rewa, India, where the stunning feat took place.

"Our guru has proven that he is truly divine. Many said he could not accomplish what he set out to do. But I now know she is with my own eyes."

The old guru himself, Ravindra Mishra, brushed off the attentions of awestruck admirers. "The Hindu goddess Kali helped me go without air for 144 hours — all glory is hers," the gray-haired mystic said.
